Abstract. The latest attack in the Monastery of Banjska by a group of Serbian terrorists makes the security sphere in Kosova even more challenging. This happens at a time when the state is not in the most favorable geopolitical position in the region, primarily due to the lack of a political agreement with Serbia. Serbia, not only through hybrid warfare but also through terrorist actions, is attempting to create chaos within the territory of Kosova. This hostile effort by Serbia cannot happen without the assistance of potential collaborators in Kosova. In this context, my analysis aims to highlight the facts and circumstances surrounding the inadequate functioning of the counterintelligence sector in Kosova. Furthermore, my analysis aims to bring to light the segments of non-cooperation and non-functioning of the institutions that cover the security sphere in Kosova.
